AI in Credential Recognition: Balancing Risks & Opportunities

Algorithmic Bias & Data Reliability: AI can perpetuate inequalities and make decisions based on uncontrolled or inaccurate data sources.

Loss of Human Oversight: Final, legally binding decisions require human judgment, especially for sensitive cases like refugee qualifications.

Operational & Governance Hurdles: High costs, lack of staff expertise, and unclear data protection frameworks hinder adoption.

Artificial Intelligence presents a dual impact on the field of credential recognition. While it offers significant opportunities to enhance efficiency and data management, it also introduces critical risks related to data integrity, ethical oversight, and operational readiness that must be carefully managed.

Enhanced Efficiency & Automation: Automate routine tasks like translation and data extraction, freeing up evaluators for value-added activities.

Improved Information Processing: AI tools can rapidly gather, translate, and systematize vast amounts of information for research.

Advanced Fraud Detection: AI's ability to generate forgeries can be leveraged to better detect fraudulent documents.

NEXT STEPS

- 4th TPG B meeting in Sèvres, France (24 June 2026).
Tentative topic: flexible pathways.
- Mid-term survey launch: soon after the meeting the mid-term survey will be launched. Deadline for responses 12 June 2026.
- Mid-term survey results presented at the fourth TPG B on LRC meeting in Sèvres, France: 24 June 2026.
- First online seminar on automatic recognition: 16 April 2026.
